

International Political Economics

Introduction:

International Political Economics is mainly for undergraduate students of grade three or four majoring in International politics as one of the basic and core professional course. Welcome any other students interested in International Political Economics as well. In order to provide a comprehensive and interdisciplinary perspective of international politics and international economy for senior students, this course will focus on the related key issues especially under the background of globalization. For instance, we will talk about not only the relations between politics and trade, but also globalization and regional integration, international investment, international trade, international finance, global security, knowledge structure, the North South relations, international energy, environmental protection, poverty, cultural communication and conflict and other important issues.